bedy were plainly disappointed, but Littleton refused to express any opinion whatsoever. District Attorney Jerome was in his usual good humor.

"I don't see why we should not confidently look for a verdict yet," he said. "These men realize how hard a task they have before them, and I think they may finally agree."

Thaw himself chafed greatly under the strain. He was in a highly nervous state and declared he hoped he would be acquitted.

e acquitted.

Mrs. William Thaw remained in her otel, but was kept in close telephonic ounection with the courtroom.

Justice Dowling motioned to Clerk enny and the latter asked the usual estions;
'Gentlemen of the jury, have you reed on your verdict?"

Foreman Gremmels was on his feet in an instant.

"We have," he said. "We find that this detendant, Harry Kendall Thaw, is not guilty, on the ground that he was insane at the time he killed Stanford White."

Evelyn Overcome.

As the word left the foreman's lips Thaw turned for a single instance and smiled at his wife. The effort was a sickly one, but Evelyn smiled back as best she could. The prisoner's face was ghastly pale, his eyes were staring, and gnastly pale, his eyes were staring, and a cold sweat had broken out on his brow. Evelyn sat in her chair as if transfixed. There was a look of expectancy on her face as Foreman Gremmels arose, and she leaned forward in her chair, tense with nervousness. As soon as he had finished she gave a little sigh and sunk in her chair, her features relaxing into the faintest smile.

Littleton was plainly elated, but his quick glance at his two colleagues checked them as they started to rise to congratulate Thaw. Immediately the court began speaking.

Judge Gives His View.

Dangerous to Community.

Therefore, upon all of the testimo in this case, this court is satisfied that a grant of freedom to this defendant ld be dangerous to the community at large. The court therefore orders defendant be recommitted to the Tombs and from there transferred to the State asylum for the insane at Matteawan."

Justice Dowling then announced that he would remain at the court until 3 o'clock this afternoon in order to give the attorneys for the defense an opportunity to prepare a writ of habeas corpus or to take any other action they desire to forestall Thaw's commitment to Matteawan.

Time Given Defense.

As Justice Dowling concluded, Littleton was cn his feet:

"If it please the court," he said, 'we would respectfully petition that the order in this case be handed down at once. We desire to consider it, but I would also ask that a stay be granted so that I may confer with my client."

"There will be no action in these premises," was the reply, "before the first of next week. That should be time enough."

Dashes for Husband.

Evelyn Thaw, shaking in every limb, darted across the room to greet her husband. But before she had advanced ten steps Detective Moore, who has been School Bill To Be Pressed working for Littleton, intercepted her 'Wait a while," he said to her. Lead Fight in Jury Room.

"I was glad I could vote as you wanted me to," he said. "But we have had a real hard strain. Too hard for an old Confederate veteran like me."

"Oh. I don't know," said Littleton. "You looked good enough for a battle of this kind. We thank you from the bottom of our hearts."

son Square Garden to see the opening performance of a summer show.

There on the roof of the Garden, which was associated in the minds of the husband and wife with terrible memories, sat Stanford White, the one man in the world whom they, both haled. Thaw walked over to White, but a pistol almost against his face, and shot him dead.

"He ruined my wife," was the only explanation the young man gave when they seized him after the tragedy. He was taken to the T-inderion police station and there charges, with murder. The next morning he was arraigned before Coroner Dooley and committed to the Tombs. In two days he was indicted for murder. Then followed the long delay until the trial.

The entire Thaw family rallied to the support of Harry. His mother was on the ocean at the time and she aid not learn of the tragedy until she landed in England. She returned immediately. The Countess of Yarmouth announced that she would come over for the trial to be near her brother.

Delphin M. Delmas, who had won a great reputation on the Pacific coast for oratory, was retained as the counsel for the defense.

Beginning of Her Ordeal.

Beginning of Her Ordeal. The trial opened on January 23, 1997, before Justice Fitzgerald, sitting in the court of general sessions. It was not until February 2 that a jury was selected after 337 talesmen had been examined. Assistant District Attorney Garvan made the opening address for the State, a really remarkable speech. the State, a really remarkable speech for such a trial. The address lasted attempting to agree, the jury was disjust seven minutes, and in two hours charged. the case of the State was made out. The defense took just twelve weeks. The remarkable feature was the testimony of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw. She went on the stand apparently just a slip of a girl, and in a brilliant duel with District Attorney Jerome came off triumphant after the most terrible cross-examination to which any woman was ever subjected. There was but one thing that could be told to save her husband, and the young wife told that. It was the story of her life from the beginning, and especially the story of her relations with the man who had made up a part of her life.

She told how she had begun to pose ing Mrs. William Thaw, Abe Hummel, and James Clinch Smith, the brother-in-law of Stanford White, but the story of none could equal that of the girlwife. She was the real figure about which the interest in the trial centered. On March 20 the trial was haited by the application of Jerome for a commission in lunacy. The commission was applied to the standard of the most horrifying cases in from 10 to 20 days, after celebrated physicians and surgeons had given up all hope of saving them.
